Question: I'm a 60 year old woman building a tiny house. I want to use a composting toilet but I'm wondering how much work is really involved with one.

Answer: I am a 60 year old woman also, and I am the primary caretaker of our toilet. Emptying the urine bottle isn't hard. I rinse mine briefly with the hose afterwards. Emptying the solid waste tank can be hard. It is quite heavy when full, and you need to be able to turn it upside down into a trash bag to empty it out. But I… see more

Question: What do you do with the contents...bury it, set on curb, take to landfill?

Answer: We supply a book called The Humanure Handbook with every Natures Head. It a great book on how to use humanure or Human Fertilizer safely and effectively to build soil rather than build more waste treatment plants. With 7 billion people and counting we are running out of places to flush.

Pricey but worth it

Reviewed in the United States on March 20, 2019

We made the mistake of buying the $1700 SunMar compost toilet thinking more expensive equals better. Boy were we wrong! The NaturesHead compost toilet is almost half the price (even at $960), half the size, 10x easier to install, and 10x easier to clean. Very happy with this purchase for our tiny home. Just fyi though, don't pretend poop doesn't stink because it does. So does urine. I don't care what the other reviews say, what your diet is, how ventilated your bathroom is, or what kind of compost mulch you use - this DOES have a slight odor. Mostly from the urine though, because there is nothing sealing it off. However, I noticed using the included spray bottle with water and dishsoap after each use does wonders. But it's the best one on the market (by far) and compared to the SunMar compost toilets this is a real bargain.

great toilet and great service

I purchased this toilet 5 years ago (1/22/2012), it has worked great in our cabin in the mountains since day one. A quick and easy install, easy to operate and maintain. We run the exhaust fan 24/7 off a set of 12 volt batteries, that also powers our 12 volt water pump, there is a 50 watt solar panel attached to keep the batteries charged. After almost 5 years of use, the fan stopped working, not expecting much I contacted the seller about getting a part number for another fan, Jim requested my address to send me a new fan. Expecting that it might take awhile or he would just drop a fan in an envelope I was surprised when I came home 3 days later and found a priority box in the mail box with 2 new fans in it.

The customer service before the sale, he answered every question we had, and the customer service after all this time has been excellent. Visitors to our cabin always ask about the toilet and we always tell them where to get it. Thanks Jim.

A great design

I should have bought this toilet decades ago for my remote vacation cabin. What a beauty. Everything is stainless steel, the design is ingenious, and best of all IT JUST WORKS. My only problem was with the large and expensive block of coconut coir that Amazon recommended as an add-on. Don't buy it; instead just buy organic sphagnum moss from a local garden shop. Also be sure to use unbleached, septic-safe toilet paper which will decompose.

What an amazing, simple, toilet!

Reviewed in the United States on June 25, 2017

When we built our vacation cottage, I did not want a septic and sought to find a composting toilet instead. I scoured the internet and compared features, height, maintenance, and customer reviews of several different brands, but all my research kept pointing back to the Nature's Head. I saved this toilet in my Amazon cart for a good year before I was ready to purchase, and I'm so glad I went through with it. No other toilet compares, really. I use coco coir in the composting chamber, it doesn't smell (and only time you notice is when you unlatch and tilt the top in order to empty the urine jug), simple operation, perfect height, comfortable to sit on, low price, and best of all we don't have to worry about maintaining a septic. I would recommend this toilet to anyone!

★★★★★ and are very glad we did

After several years of owning another brand of composting toilet,we decided to look farther afield. Our old one was coming apart, cracking, and anyway created odor problems. We ordered a Nature's Head, and are very glad we did. It is well-engineered for function and durability. It looks as nice as any other toilet you'll see. It is easy to maintain, although we have had a bit of difficulty finding the right moisture level. For awhile we had problems turning the crank, but it turned out to be our error. We are quite pleased with this new fixture. Maintenance is simple and we are not harming the ecology of our small farm. We have had it four months now, and it looks as if it will last for a very long time.

★★★★☆ Installed in a cabin

Reviewed in the United States on April 22, 2013

We purchased this toilet to install in our off-the-grid cabin. All the product components were well packed, and the toilet arrived in good shape, in a very large, but sturdy box. Installing the toilet was straight-forward. Installing the required vent was not. The instructions for this, as others have noted, are basically nonexistent. The company could and should do much better than leaving you to figure it out for yourself. Since our cabin is off a long, bad, dirt road, we wanted to get it right. No quick trips to the store! Nevertheless, we got the vent installed. As for power, right now it is connected to a 12 volt battery.

We've used the toilet for nearly a year, on several weekends a month. With two of us, I have emptied the compost section only twice. Not pleasant, but tolerable. I empty the liquids container much more often

I would have rated this as a 5 star except the instructions for the required vent were so poor. But remember, this is a composting toilet, and you have to do something with the resulting waste. Figure out how you are going to manage that before you purchase this toilet.
